Are we spreading awareness or just sharing without care?

The Man Behind the Headlines

Saheb Bhattacharya is widely respected for his contributions to Bengali cinema and television. But no matter how famous someone is, they still deserve privacy, dignity, and basic human respect — especially when faced with viral exposure that may be invasive, unverified, or misrepresented.

Let's not let curiosity override compassion.

Virality Isn't a Green Light

Just because a video is being shared widely doesn't mean it's okay to join the bandwagon. Before sharing or reacting, consider:

- 1. Was this shared with consent?
- 2. Does this respect Saheb's personal boundaries?
- 3. Would I feel okay if this were about me or someone I love?

If any answer is no, then sharing it is part of the problem — not the conversation.

Shift the Focus: Support Over Speculation ♥

As online citizens, here's how we can act responsibly:

Don't circulate unverified or sensitive content Call out harassment, mockery, or hate Celebrate Saheb for his talent, not his trending Promote mental health and digital ethics

Let's Build a Better Internet

Public figures like Saheb Bhattacharya are human first. They bring art, creativity, and joy to our screens — and they, too, are vulnerable to the downsides of going viral. Dignity is not optional — it's a right, both online and offline.
