Director's Statement

The Lethal Force: THE DREAM II was born from a fascination with the fragile boundary between dream and waking life. I wanted to explore the moment where the familiar dissolves into the unknown—where memory, illusion, and fear intertwine. In this liminal space, reality itself begins to fracture, and the human spirit is confronted with forces it cannot fully name. For me, cinema is not only storytelling — it is a mirror to the subconscious, a way to project what cannot be spoken. This work is both personal and universal: a reflection on the eternal struggle with inner darkness, and the possibility that within fear lies transformation. Through shifting images, dissonant soundscapes, and dreamlike rhythms, The Lethal Force: THE DREAM II becomes less a film to be watched than an experience to be entered.

Short Director's Statement

The Lethal Force: THE DREAM II is an exploration of the fragile line between dream and reality. Through shifting images and shadowed spaces, I sought to create a cinematic experience that mirrors the subconscious—a journey where fear, silence, and darkness reveal deeper truths about the human spirit. This film is not meant to provide answers, but to immerse the audience in the mystery of existence itself.

Movie Synopsis

Two years after the creation of The Lethal Force, the producer and director of the franchise, Deathor Rogue, decides to produce the next installment. This time, however, something dark threatens his life, something that was born with the creation of The Lethal Force, a power so evil, that will curse everyone involved with the franchise. One team, one family, their friendship will all be tested. One of them will suffer, and all of them will be cursed.
