

My original education in and practice of painting formally influences my later approaches to new media, photography and experimental filmmaking. I am interested in critical engagements with communities through artistic research by examining situated and assumed knowledges as both physical and virtual public spaces. By revealing contested boundaries and personal narratives, I try to work in this space through a personal point of perspective. Often this process involves applying emotional and experiential textures to define and map these discovered interior landscapes.