Ron Perlman

Narrator

Golden Globe winner, Ron Perlman, a classically trained actor, has appeared in countless stage plays, feature films and television productions. He was born Ronald Francis Perlman on April 13, 1950 in Washington Heights, Manhattan, New York. His first real breakthrough came later, when he landed the role of Vincent, the lion-man, opposite Linda Hamilton in the cult series Beauty and the Beast (1987). His work in this role earned him not only a Golden Globe Award, but an underground fan following.

After that, he spent time doing supporting work on television and in independent films such as Guillermo del Toro's debut Cronos (1993) (where a lifelong friendship and collaboration between the director and Perlman would blossom) as Angel and his first lead role as One in Jean-Pierre Jeunet's surreal The City of Lost Children (1995). His first real big role in a mainstream film came when Jeunet wanted him for the brutish Johner in his first Hollywood outing Alien: Resurrection (1997). Perlman has also used his distinctive voice to his advantage, appearing in many animated films/series and commercials, and he is a video game fan favorite because of his work on such games as Fallout: A Post-Nuclear Role-Playing Game (1997) (VG) series.

It was not until much later that he received worldwide fame when his good friend Guillermo del Toro helped him land the title role in the big-budget comic book movie Hellboy (2004). Del Toro fought the studio for 4 years because they wanted a more secure name, but he stood his ground and in 2004, after almost 25 years in and out of obscurity, Perlman became a household name and a sought out actor. Perlman has had one of the most off-beat careers in film, playing everything from a prehistoric ape-man to an aging transsexual, and will always be a rarity in Hollywood.

Other notable roles include the cunning Norman Arbutnot in The Last Supper (1995), sniper expert Koulikov in Enemy at the Gates (2001), vampire leader Reinhardt in Blade II (2002), his reprisal of Hellboy in Hellboy II: The Golden Army (2008) and now stars as biker chief Clarence Morrow in the popular FX cable series Sons of Anarchy.
