

The Zodiac Killer From Beyond The Grave

A review by Dennis Sparks

The public seems to be fascinated/titillated by sensational, unsolved crimes of mayhem. Especially so with serial killers, the most famous/infamous being Jack the Ripper during the late 1800's in London. But the Zodiac Killer, of some years ago, would probably rank among the top ten in these lurid digests of evil. And so we come to this short video of "The Zodiac Killer From Beyond the Grave."

It really seems like two films. The first part being a professional looking introduction taking place in a graveyard (nice touch) well-delivered by executive producer and host Dave Paull, who adds a sense of credibility to the proceedings. His information is based on factual accounts.

The second part of the film is enacted by Clyde Lewis, a well-known radio personality of the national radio show Ground Zero. This portion of the film takes place in the old newspaper office which reported on the story of this monster. There is some belief that it is being haunted by a ghost of these events from this period. They attempt to "interview" the entity and take recordings of the session.

This part of the show, I will give you, is entertaining, but is entirely up to the viewer as to whether the various flashing lights, "instruments," sounds, "voices" are authentic, as well as the people (all of whom are believers, I assume) who are presenting this.

It is worth a look-see, but the veracity of it will be up to you, the discriminating viewer. For my part, as Fox Mulder from "the "X-Files" proclaimed, "I Want To Believe!" But paranormal facts, as always, are fleeting, because they are beyond our five senses.

www.dennisparksreviews.blogspot.com