Logline: A handsome, single local lighthouse keeper is pulled out of mourning after a plane full of badass stewardesses crashes with (almost) no casualties near his sleepy little vilage. Together, they help battle a crooked clean gas company intent on fracking on local land, which has already caused enough deadly pollution to have stirred the ire of the mysterious sea monster, Ghostapus – a ghost octopus!

The Story: Recently berieved, attractive lightkeeper ALF WINSTON wants to lead a quiet, simple life. When a storm hits his small village causing a plane full of stewardesses to crash-land and a series of gruesome attacks are discovered, Alf must break out of his self-inflicted isolation and take action. But he guards his heart as much as he guards his beloved village- 45%. As Aborigines and activists gather forces to protest the illegal fracking, Ghostapus goes on a rampage; tearing human victims apart and eating them like beef jerky. She uses her deep-sea mental telepathy to set the blissful townsfolk against each other. But for what? Behind the seemingly sinister monster lies the truth: the creature is not evil, she and her babies were murdered by a gas company and its toxic dumping. The only beings Ghostapus can communicate with are a local autistic girl and a teenage Goth with self-esteem issues. Can the tight-knit community weather the storm of corruption, greed, fear and a giant angry-mom-octopus-ghost? Can they save themselves from each other? Can the single, winsome lighthouse keeper guard his heart from an equally if not more winsome and vivacious "bad-girl" stewardess with a secret CIA past? They must all act fast before the corporate monster and grieving sea monster cause any further carnage!
