Three best friends are caught in a confrontation when moving into a new rented house.

SYNOPSIS

Two young man, David and Raka , have been involved in a backstreet relationship sor some time, until David decides to end it. This is due to David's engagement to a young woman named Inge, David and Raka's best friend, and three of them's decision to move together as roommates into a rented house. Shortly after ending their relationship, during a visit to look at the house, Inge reveals that she knows about the backstreet relationship all along, resulting in a confrotation.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

This film is about how two people learn some self-respect. Raka and Inge invest their time and love for a person who does not deserve it, who is not capable of returning the same love and respect. At the beginning of the story, the three of them have different ideas of love, not realising that perhaps none of them are right. Love is selfless, but love is not total disregard of one's self-respect either. When there is no self-respect, there is no love.

- Winnie Benjamin

PRODUCER'S STATEMENT

The first time we read the script, we were overwhelmed with the story and strong the message was delivered even though it only had three characters to the film. Though told from the viewpoint of a complicated relationship between 3 friends, our message is universal and is not exclusive to any form of relationships. The film has powerful performances from our actors and we certainly believe that their talent will absolutely shine in this film to deliver audiences a special cinematic experience about love and the importance of self-respect.
