"Human relationships always involve a variety of emotions that, in cinema, can be explored in countless ways. This thematic potential is certainly of particular interest to director Tom White who explores in his short film, 'Remembrance', a sensitive human context through which he approaches a generous palette of emotions, deliberately misleading the viewer's horizon of expectation.

Thus, the cinematic experience goes from a temperate contemplation of two souls who try to regain their emotional integrity to an acute awareness of the impossibility of overcoming the demons from the past, reaching a visceral area."
