Premises:

“Lonely people tend to have a richer inner world”

In contemporary society, interpersonal skills have never been more important. However, for kids who were born in the 21st century, they are in an era where everything could go "online". Some believe it's changing the way how people live, others claim it's not as beautiful as it looks like. 'Rachel de Neverland' will be a film that's based around these conflicts and discusses social media from an introvert's perspective.

Story Synopsis

Rachel was born with the social anxiety disorder, and it made her suffered a lot. At the age where other kids are making friends at school, Rachel was watching education videos at home. After Rachel grew up, she fell in love with a guy called Nick on social media, despite they don't really know each other in reality. So one day, Nick asks Rachel to come out and meet each other in person. However, it's not actually good news for Rachel. On one hand, she has no idea about who this person is underneath the photos, on the other hand, she is worried that her social anxiety disorder might let him down. In order to prevent that, Rachel puts on all the effort to become a better person. Soon, it's time for their first date. Rachel arrived at the restaurant, and she surprisingly finds Nick communicates with sign language. He might be imperfect elsewhere, but he's perfect for Rachel.
