

Dear Programmer,

White Man Camouflage is a film about a town that takes white privilege too far. I spent a lot of time in the Adirondacks, and I often wonder how people can afford expensive homes. There are very few places to work in the deep woods that can pay for the property. Granted, many of the people are retired, but many are not. I imagined how a small community could maintain a wealthy lifestyle without working for a living.

Underneath the story is a truth, that the media does that spend much time reporting stories about young BIPOC women who disappear. I imagined an underground system that traffics young girls from the US to Canada to China. Lake Champlain is a porous route for this kind of trade. This is not a true story, but I wouldn't be surprised if there are forms trafficking on the water route.

I hope you enjoy the script. I feel it has enough action and suspense to keep an audience entertained, and create a lively discussion at the end.
