BEHIND THE SCENES

---

Rafael Pease is a 28 year old Chilean/Cuban filmmaker who uses his backgrounds in environmental sciences, socio-environmental rights activism and career as a professional snowboard mountaineer to create forward thinking documentaries.

Wearing multiple hats from director to producer on most projects he strives to educate, inspire and create change in each documentary, while giving a voice to marginalized communities and accurately depicting the science and importance of threatened areas and people.

SYNOPSIS

Tupungato: empathy in death, follows Rafael Pease's six0year obsession of visibilizing a threatened area. A winter expedition to the highest peak, Volcan Tupungato 21,555ft, evolves into a fight for conservation. In hopes of creating a national park, containing 340,000acres in one of the worlds biodiversity hotspots, as well as a significant source of water for 40% of Chile's population. Interviews with renowned scientists and activists unveil a web of corruption in the government and multinational corporations, stemming from imperial religion and a dictators constitution. This explosive film is set against the backdrop of historic protests, as the people of Chile rise up for social and environmental rights.
