

In August of 1975 a sleepy little town in Oklahoma called Atoka, hosted 30,000 music fans for what was called the Oklahoma Woodstock of country music.

A young reporter from Dallas, Texas is dispatched to cover the event which featured artists such as Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Jerry Lee Lewis, and others. Warned by a colleague on the hazards of attending music festivals, Maxwell Factor begins asking questions about the event when he meets a young woman who grabs his eye.

Once the music starts, a nefarious local takes the opportunity to feed his need for blood, until his secret is discovered by the young reporter. What happens in the next 48 hours will change the young reporter forever.
