DRAMA/SCI-FI

SYNOPSIS

John, a grieving scientist inadvertently rewinds time and finds himself at his very first date with his late wife, Esmé. But can he win over the woman who fell for the man that John no longer is?

"...'TIS BETTER TO HAVE LOVED AND LOST,
THAN NEVER TO HAVE LOVED AT ALL.."

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

When a relationship comes to an end, whether it be as a result of a break-up, a betrayal, or worse... a death. It can be very easy to fall into the temptation of re-writing the history that led to the loss. Stuck in the bargaining stage of grief, you may find yourself attempting to negotiate with your memories, subconsciously attempting to manifest an emotional reality in which said loss wouldn't hurt as much.

"If the love wasn't so strong in the first place, the pain shouldn't be either... right?"

A true feat of cognitive dissonance: good memories become sour, positive experiences inspire cringe.

But what happens to the changes that outlive those connections? To the personal growth that resulted from those now tainted experiences? To the tangible by-products of the events that created those memories? Do they get written off and disappear into the ether, as though they never existed?

The First Time I Never Met You offers a cautionary perspective of what could be at stake when one rejects their journey through grief and denies acceptance.

To quote Alfred Lord Tennyson, " 'tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all". This film is my interpretation of how those two ideas weigh up against each other.

RENEE BAILEY

"Esmé"

Renee Bailey most recently appeared in BBC 3's MOOD and E4's HOW TO BE A PERSON, which both came out winners during the 2023 BAFTA Television Awards; for best 'Mini-Series' and 'Short Form Programme' respectively.

An alumni of the Identity School of Acting, Bailey is paving her way as a performer both on stage and on screen. She more notoriously appeared as series regular 'Leila' in Netflix/BBC's REBEL CHEER SQUAD: A GET EVEN SERIES, a spin-off to the GET EVEN series.

Bailey is set to appear on BBC's period drama CALL THE MIDWIFE, as well as the HBO/Channel 4 TV drama GET MILLIE BLACK, in which she will appear alongside Joe Dempsie and Tamara Lawrence.
