Summary

Kostas, a young student, returns home to Athens for Christmas break from his studies in Thessaloniki. As he prepares to celebrate his birthday, strange occurrences involving his old phone begin to haunt him. Mysterious black photos appear among his recent memories, seemingly linked to a tragic train accident from decades ago that he saw on the news. As Kostas spends time with friends and meets new ones, the unsettling coincidences escalate, leading to a fateful train journey back to Thessaloniki. During the trip, a sudden crash transports Kostas into a surreal, luminous forest where he is confronted by the spirit of a child from the past. The child hands him a letter that reads, "You are not to blame for the sins and mistakes of others... I'm sorry." Realizing the deep connections between his experiences, Kostas is left to ponder the impact of every action and the intertwining of past and present. As he walks forward, he sees his friends watching him, and the true nature of his journey is revealed.
