Short synopsis/tagline:

The male gaze is diverted for a moment.

Director's statement

Out of Order is an exercise in keeping things simple and not overthinking. My aim was to compose this short collage film much like a punk song. I suppose I have succeeded considering the length of the film, at least.

Making no-budget films is often not a viable option for film professionals such as myself, but making this little film during the evenings and weekends during the last couple of years has been extremely invigorating. I hope I can take something of that lightness with me to my traditionally produced and funded work.

While I hope the film is a fun watch, the issues it touches upon are dead serious. The rise of far-right movements and neo-conservative politics into the mainstream remind us of how our rights that generations before us have fought for can be taken away faster than one can say "homonormativity". Liberal capitalism won't even blink as long as business as usual keeps running – how little our governments in Europe have done to stop the ongoing genocide in Gaza gives us an example of how much the human rights of those labelled Others really weigh. In times like these I feel it's my duty as a queer filmmaker to take a stand and get ever more political, by whatever means at hand. It's not enough to resist going backwards. We must imagine and then construct better futures. And while we're at it, we'd better have some laughs as well.

Director's biography

Antti Tuomikoski (b. 1983) is a film editor and documentary filmmaker based in Helsinki, Finland. He has directed the documentary film Expensive Shit (2008) and the found footage short film Out of Order (2025). As an editor he has worked with established Finnish directors such as Arto Halonen, Ville Suhonen, and Taru Mäkelä, as well as with up-and-coming filmmakers. His most recent feature-length editing credit is Rebellion for Future (2025), a direct cinema documentary about Elokapina – the Finnish Extinction Rebellion – directed by Saku Soukka. He holds an MA degree in editing from Aalto University, Finland, and is a member of Finnish Cinema Editors (F.C.E.) A father of one, he has recently been grappling with the issue of combining activism with his passion for films, as well as finding the time to play the baritone sax in his ska band Kerjääjät.
