LOGLINE

"A Colombian man travels abroad as a tourist with the sole desire to prosper and help his family get ahead. However, upon arriving at the international airport and crossing the border, he is captured and accused of being a major international trafficker of drugs, weapons, and ammunition for a country he had never even visited. In a nation where he does not speak the language and is unfamiliar with the laws, he is sent to a maximum-security prison exclusively for foreigners. For the next 41 months, he is plunged into an exhausting psychological and physical struggle for survival, forced to study the judicial, criminal, and penitentiary systems to defend himself from within. After filing 81 legal appeals that were systematically ignored, the sheer exhaustion of the fight leads him to realize that the only way to regain his freedom is by pleading guilty to charges he did not commit."
