MY FATHER, DICK ALLEN

WAITING FOR THE CALL,
JUSTICE SERVED
WITH A PLAQUE FOR #15

SHORT DESCRIPTION

A son's intimate tribute to his father, one of baseball's most electrifying and misunderstood legends, Dick Allen. My Father, Dick Allen follows Richard Allen Jr.'s emotional journey as the Baseball Hall of Fame posthumously welcomes the slugger from Wampum, Pennsylvania — a story of resilience, rebellion and long-overdue redemption.

SERIES SYNOPSIS

My Father, Dick Allen is a five-part unscripted docuseries chronicling the extraordinary life and tortured legacy of Dick Allen, a seven-time All-Star whose prodigious talent was matched only by the controversies that dogged him, and his family's decades-long fight to see him enshrined in the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Told through the eyes of his son, Richard Allen Jr., the series begins where the story started: Wampum, Pennsylvania, the small town that shaped a kid with a 40-ounce bat and mythic gifts. It traces Allen's turbulent 15-year career, from his 1964 Rookie of the Year debut in Philadelphia, where he endured death threats and racial hostility as the Phillies' first Black superstar, to his transcendent MVP-winning 1972 season with the Chicago White Sox, where he was finally embraced as a folk hero. The series unflinchingly documents the heartbreak of his Hall of Fame candidacy, twice falling a single vote short, and the family's grief when he died in 2020, still waiting. It culminates in the cathartic December 2024 announcement of his posthumous election and follows Richard Jr. to Cooperstown in the summer of 2025 to witness his father take his rightful place among the immortals.

Featuring intimate interviews with Dick's widow Willa Allen, Hall of Famers Fergie Jenkins and Dusty Baker, Goose Gossage, Carlos May and others, My Father, Dick Allen is not simply a baseball story. It is a portrait of a man who refused to be anything but himself, and the son determined to make sure the world finally understands what that cost, and what it was worth.

Episode 1: Wampum

SHORT DESCRIPTION

Before the controversy, the headlines, and the Hall of Fame debates, there was a gifted kid from a small Pennsylvania town. Episode One of My Father, Dick Allen returns to Wampum, where Dick Allen's story — and his greatness — truly began.

EPISODE 1 SYNOPSIS

Episode One opens by introducing us to Dick Allen, one of baseball's most electrifying and misunderstood talents, offering a brief but vivid look at his incredible career and the repeated heartbreak of a Hall of Fame candidacy that eluded him for decades. With that foundation in place, the episode then turns to where the story truly begins: Wampum, Pennsylvania, the small borough where Allen grew up and first revealed the extraordinary gifts that would one day carry him to Cooperstown.

Before baseball defined him, it was basketball that made him a local legend. Allen led his high school teams to state championships, packed gyms with eye-popping scoring performances, and left those who witnessed him with memories that felt almost mythical. Friends and family remember a three-sport star who dominated whatever he touched, a natural athlete whose confidence was matched by a deep loyalty to the people he loved.

That loyalty becomes the emotional anchor of the episode. When Dick signs with the Philadelphia Phillies, he uses his signing bonus not on himself but to buy his mother a house. It is a gesture that speaks to who he was before the headlines found him, and it sets the tone for everything that follows. Featuring interviews with Wampum friends and family alongside Hall of Famers who played with or competed against Allen, including Dusty Baker and Goose Gossage, Episode One establishes the heart of the series: a gifted kid from a small town whose greatness was inseparable from where he came from and who he loved.

SHORT DESCRIPTION OF TALENT APPEARING IN EPISODE 1 (WAMPUM):

Richard Allen Jr. is deeply inspired by his father's life, leading him to produce My Father, Dick Allen in his honor. From a young age, Richard Jr. developed a love of baseball through observing his father during his time with the St. Louis Cardinals and Los Angeles Dodgers. His background is in Business Administration and Management, experience that served him well during his 15 years at the prestigious Howrey law firm.

Willa Allen was married to Dick for 33 years, supporting the man behind it all with unwavering loyalty. Perhaps more than anyone else, Willa knows the intimate details of what life was like for Dick behind the scenes. After an already impressive career where she started as the first Black administrative assistant for the state of Illinois and later worked at Universal Studios for 30 years, Willa is now a producer on My Father, Dick Allen, ensuring her late husband's legacy is the truth.

Ron Allen is Dick's younger brother, and an impressive athlete in his own right. Alongside Dick and their other older brother Hank, Ron was a promising basketball player from Wampum High School who went on to attend Youngstown State University on a basketball scholarship.

Claire Smith is a renowned sportswriter who had an undeniable impact on the positive representation of women in her field through her work as the first female Major League Baseball beat writer for the Hartford Courant. One of her many accomplishments includes receiving the J. G. Taylor Spink Award, which is considered the Baseball Writers' Association of America's highest honor.

Richard "Goose" Gossage is a Hall of Fame relief pitcher widely regarded as one of the most dominant closers in baseball history. Over a 22-year career, Goose recorded more than 300 saves and was a key figure in the evolution of the modern bullpen, earning induction into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 2008.

Dusty Baker is a two-time All-Star player turned highly respected Major League Baseball manager. Over his decades-long career, he has led multiple teams to postseason success and won the World Series as manager of the Houston Astros in 2022, cementing his legacy as one of the game's most influential leaders.

Jayson Stark is an award-winning baseball journalist known for his long-standing coverage of Major League Baseball. A prominent voice at ESPN and The Athletic, Jayson has built a reputation for insightful reporting and storytelling, earning the J. G. Taylor Spink Award for excellence in baseball writing.

Mike Sielski is a prominent sports columnist for The Philadelphia Inquirer and a bestselling author. Known for his in-depth storytelling, Mike has written extensively on Philadelphia sports history, including acclaimed books that explore the lives and legacies of iconic athletes.

Jacob Goldfinger is an author whose work explores historical and cultural narratives. His writing focuses on uncovering lesser-known stories and offering perspective on race and identity in America.

Andrew Woolley is a producer who works primarily in documentary and independent film. He focuses on developing story-driven projects and helping bring real-life narratives to the screen.

Ziff Sistrunk was a professional football player best known for his time as a linebacker with the Oakland Raiders. A key contributor during the team's dominant era, Ziff was part of the Raiders' Super Bowl XI championship team.

Bob Shrock and Karolee Loughhead are longtime residents of Wampum, Pennsylvania. Their perspectives provide insight into the community where Dick grew up and help paint a picture of his home town.

Rob Wilson was a close friend of Dick's, offering personal insight into his life beyond baseball. Through sharing day-to-day experiences with a baseball legend, Rob provides a more intimate perspective on his character and the relationships that mattered most to him.

Jocko Sims is an accomplished actor and director known for his roles in television series such as The Last Ship and New Amsterdam. As the narrator of My Father, Dick Allen, he helps guide the story and bring Dick's life and legacy to the screen.

Episode 2: Little Rock

SHORT DESCRIPTION

Episode Two of My Father, Dick Allen travels to Little Rock, Arkansas, where one of Major League Baseball's greatest and most iconoclastic stars of the 1960s and 1970s faced his most defining test. Dick Allen once said returning to Little Rock would be like walking through a graveyard. This episode follows his son, Doobie, and Hall of Fame pitcher Fergie Jenkins as they return to the city that tested and ultimately forged the legend.

EPISODE 2 SYNOPSIS

Episode Two travels to Little Rock, Arkansas, to revisit the year that shaped Dick Allen more than any other. In 1963, the Philadelphia Phillies assigned the 21-year-old Allen to their triple-A affiliate, the Arkansas Travelers, making him the first Black player in the team's history. He had not asked to be a trailblazer, and no one had prepared him for what awaited.

In a city still raw from the Little Rock Nine and the violence surrounding the integration of Central High School, Allen lived largely alone, ate on a hot plate in his room, endured a vandalized car, racist hate mail and harassment by police. He went on to slug 33 home runs and win the team's Most Valuable Player award. He never went back.

More than six decades later, his son, Richard Allen Jr., known as Doobie, returns in his father's place. Joining him is Hall of Fame pitcher Fergie Jenkins, who as a young Black man from Ontario also played briefly for the Travelers that same season. Together, the two men walk the streets of Little Rock, visiting Central High School, the Daisy Bates House, the site of the old Travelers ballpark, and the people whose memories keep that era alive. Their journey brings the story of Dick Allen's most difficult chapter into vivid, present-tense relief. The episode ends on a note of hard-won grace, as Doobie and Jenkins return to the field to throw out the first pitch at a Travelers game, a picture of the two men's fathers illuminating the scoreboard behind them.

SHORT DESCRIPTION OF TALENT APPEARING IN EPISODE 2 (LITTLE ROCK):

Jacob Goldfinger is a historian and writer focused on uncovering the intersections of baseball history, race, and culture. He brings this passion to his work on Medium, where he specializes in detailed narratives regarding mid-century baseball, including his acclaimed work on Dick's traumatic and transformative 1963 season with the Little Rock Travelers. Currently based in New York, Jacob is working on a book exploring this pivotal era in Arkansas baseball history.

Ernie Dumas was an associate editor and a reporter for The Arkansas Gazette and a columnist for Arkansas Times. Ernie shared his experiences and historical insights about baseball and racial integration in Arkansas, particularly focusing on the Cotton States League and the Arkansas Travelers. Beyond the Gazette, his work has been featured in The New York Times, The Philadelphia Inquirer, and Newsweek.

Ferguson "Fergie" Jenkins is a legendary Canadian right-handed pitcher renowned for his dominant 19-year career primarily with the Chicago Cubs. He was the second Black person to play for the Travelers while navigating segregation alongside Dick. Fergie finished his 19-year career with 3,192 strikeouts and fewer than 1,000 walks, and was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1991.

Bill Brooks was a pioneering Little Rock trailblazer who broke racial barriers as one of the first Black athletes at Central High School, starring in football, baseball, and track. A talented athlete, Bill later played with the St. Louis Cardinals organization alongside Dick before becoming a respected businessman and leader in the Little Rock community.

Russ Meeks currently serves as President, Chairman of the Board of Directors, and Chair of the Executive Committee of the Arkansas Travelers. He was born in Little Rock, Arkansas and attended the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville in 1967. Russ graduated with an emphasis in finance, and later served as Deputy Attorney General, Chief Deputy of the Trial Division at the Attorney General's office.
